Art With Elders uses the power of art, creativity, and community to enrich the journey of aging.

A Message from the Executive Director

Dear Friends and Family of Art With Elders (AWE),

Yet another cool and foggy San Francisco summer has arrived, and it's again time to save the date for our much anticipated annual show.

We have been hard at work preparing for this year's event, slotted for October 27th. The artwork remarkably raises the bar again, and we're thrilled to read the biographies and learn more about the rich lives of our eclectic students. Let's not only recognize our students here but also our valued community partners, who play an important role in making the event all that it has come to be. Here's to all our senior communities, donors, supporting foundations, volunteers and importantly those beloved activity directors without whom the show simply would not go on.

These are, in many ways, challenging times with too many discordant notes of strife and disunity. Our weekly classes remain my safe harbor, continuing to provide nourishing respite from the chaos of the day. The regular sharing of creative thoughts, ideas and camaraderie has become, for me and my students, a lovely and sustainable gift that deserves sincere recognition. I can't help but consider the treasures of wisdom, hope, love and creativity that are continually exchanged during our AWE classes. It's no wonder that this weekly exchange of humanity and creativity culminates in an event of such profound impact.

Gratefully,

Mark Campbell Executive Director

Student Artist Spotlight

Yu-Mei Lu

Born in mainland China, Yu Mei Lu grew up in a large family in rural Taiwan, where survival meant a lot of hard work. Her first visit to the U.S. was with her husband, a pastor, to Amherst, Massachusetts, where she studied English and art--useful skills for a kindergarten teacher. The two devout Christians returned to Taiwan, where she taught and did church work in a hospital.

Mei came to live in San Francisco in 2007 to be near her adopted daughter. She also has a son in Boston and three grandchildren, and enjoys playing piano, cross-stitching, and knitting.

The fall colors of the maple trees in Amherst still influence Yu Mei's work. "I appreciate those natural things," she says. The 77-year old loves the feeling of freedom that painting gives her, especially with acrylics. It took her awhile to learn that in art, "You don't follow. You just do what you want-- not like in China."

Art, she feels, increases your self-confidence, and "makes your life happy and peaceful." Her advice: "Art is from the inside--it's your idea. Don't let outside things cover your inside things."

Betty Rothaus

When asked why she likes working with us, Betty stated, "It is truly a privilege to work with AWE. This organization offers the very best gift imaginable to people living in long term care: the miraculous possibility of a new creative life. The teachers and volunteers are caring, skilled and overjoyed to see someone flourish as the residents find their creativity, imagination and hope again. Under their guidance, elders reclaim their birthright of a creative life and grow into new roles as mentors in courage, intelligence and excellence. The message here is about wholeness and healing, finding beauty and mystery everyday, and to never give up.

working with elders and I have never looked back. They have enriched my life beyond measure, and I am forever grateful for this opportunity to serve them. In 2000, Brent Nettle, the brilliant founder of AWE, invited my students, in my ten year old full- time art program, to begin showing with AWE at their Annual Exhibit. This enlarged these resident artists' world beyond our community, gave them the opportunity of sharing their talent with a much larger audience, and gave them greater confidence in themselves by creating recognition and a magnificent celebration of them and their outstanding artistic efforts. I am so grateful to AWE, for their acknowledgement of my students and for my own support as a fellow teacher.

Dwight's Vision by Betty Rothaus

Mark Campbell, has long been a treasure to this organization as an inspiring mentor and friend to its teachers, volunteers and residents. Darcie O'Brien is a pleasure to work with in planning exciting and creative new exhibition opportunities, and Jason with his wonderful organizational skills, is a steady, timely and reliable liason I count on. With its forward thinking board of directors, this outstanding organization improves lives each and every day and offers the Bay Area an unprecedented model for healthy aging and living one's life with joy and blessings."

Fascinated by the arts since childhood, Rothaus creates through drawing, painting, sculpture and printmaking. She holds a BFA in Painting, an MFA in Printmaking and a degree as a Specialist in Art Education. She studied color intaglio printing at William Stanley Hayter's Atelier 17 in Paris, France, design with Sara Wallach, portraiture with Bob Gerbracht, and landscape with Albert Handell. Her drawings, paintings, prints and sculpture have been shown both nationally and internationally and hang in private collections worldwide.

Before beginning to teach seniors, she taught art to students ranging in age from early childhood through adulthood in public and private schools, university fine arts programs, museums and community centers. She has also consulted for public schools, training teachers how to use art in their classrooms. Since 1990, she has directed and taught the Art Program for elders at the Reutlinger Community in Danville, CA.

Art, Rothaus believes, must arise from an individual's rich and varied life experiences, interests, and innate curiosity. Her students learn artmaking skills, patience, and a love of beauty as they discover the miracle of their creative selves. She learns about perseverance, courage, and openness to the miracles life holds at any age.
